Health and Human Services, Office of the Chief Information Officer

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) cybersecurity program is responsible for protecting the sensitive personal, financial, and health care information of millions of Americans. Cybersecurity threats are significant and widespread, range in size and scope, and continue to evolve daily. HHS' Office of the Chief Information Officer (OCIO) is tasked with implementing a comprehensive, innovative cybersecurity program. OCIO uses the industry's leading expertise and technology to meet these threats head on.
